

Using the accessible Siebel Center for Design as a test subject, I simplified formal floor plans into an intuitive and replicable tactile key. This key emphasizes critical elements like stairs, ramps, and emergency exits.

My aim was to create a standardized, adaptable system for tactile floor plans, addressing the current lack of consistency. This universal approach promotes true accommodation, especially in complex spaces like hospitals and airports, ensuring usability for everyone through its dual-sensory design.

